

The short report about the CPILS

I had studied English at the CPILS in Cebu City, Philippines from 2 - 30 in September. My first impression about it was not good because our accommodation was old and a food was not very good. But having enjoyed studying English thanks to each teacher and my classmate, I was used to living there two weeks later.

I took the Business English Course which had 6 classes from 8:00am until 6:00pm in a weekday. I learned about marketing, arranging a meeting and how to give a presentation in addition to studying English. I especially remember giving a presentation about Softbank Mobile in English with Power Point in a class. Then teachers gave me a lot of homework. It took two or three hours to do it every night. I had a feeling that time went by fast.

A weekend (Saturday and Sunday) is a day off. So I went to Bohol Island to see the Tarsiers (small monkey) and go snorkeling with new friends. The number of people of our group was thirteen people including Chinese, Korean, Taiwanese and Japanese. We spent the night there drinking and talking about etc, which made me have fun. I still keep in touch with them with Facebook.

Finally, studying English at the CPILS was useful for me because I didn't only study English but also made a good relationship with other country people. It's my possession.

By Tetsuyuki Mimura